

Flashlights in the Dark:

The synth-primer-tones are actually the "flashlights in the dark" in a technical sense, but I also want to search for some sense of abstract meaning conveyed by the text. In the text, I want "Flashlights in the Dark" to refer to the smallest glimmers of excitement, forward-looking, ambition, etc, that get a person through frustrating times of feeling voiceless and powerless.

"Where Sleeps The Light?"

What is the BRAAVE WORLD?

(Rhythmically chant numerous possible answers to "What is the brave world")

What is the BRAAVE WORLD?

(This is intended to be a not-very-subtle reference to "Brave New World")

Gap 1 to feature TraditionChorus

Gap 2 to feature TraditionChorus

Exhilarating Global (at!) Celestial clouds

Fake Dark Angry Ending Context

PoA

Sense of return to Loud dense fanfare-like statements

If the primerTone chorus is involved here, they should actually be whispering aleatorically.

Suddenly subdued, quite dark, disorienting

Quiet but (rhythmically active!), imitative polyphony in the three traditionally scored parts, complex harmonic pads in the Electronics Score.

Continuity initiative, building

Electronics gain a more impetuous, dense-like function as light-chor 'springboards' off of more numerous PrimerTones.

{ WHO are we? / HOW do we find our way? }

(Rhythmically chant numerous possible answers to { "How do we find our way?" })

(In this Universe)

Who are WE?

Who am I?

Huge arrival: Driving sustained Loudness

Maybe use the dance-like material in this final phase of development here?

Lament Bass: Aiming to evoke profound sadness, akin to an elegy commemorating the end of an era.

Seeming like a lode to dark ending

Clare Conducts this passage free of sound-event triggers

Real Determined Ending Cathartic, Impactful, Driven

Bright, Dry Loud Ending

PoA

5-10 seconds of Electronic Sound, dust-setting effect

LIGHT CHORUS -- (27 Singers)

always responding to short or long primer tones as a strict law producing complex, celestial, many-note-sonorities throughout the piece. Should be interjecting, maybe even interruptive at times. The overall tone should be admiring of nature, faithful in humanity's ability to adapt and invent, awe-driven, and determined. If ever this text were to be viewed as an argument, this side should be the defender, rather than the aggressor.

0:00 -- Answering "Where sleeps the light?" in three-syllable[MinMax(2-5)] interjecting fragments

1:45 -- Point of Alignment between to chorus halves: "In the Land of the Free And the home of the Brave World, the Brave world, the Brave world"

1:55 -- TACET for --a minute

5:15 -- Point of Alignment between to chorus halves: "Final answer to "What is the Brave World", and ellision into "Who are We" (in this universe)"

5:25 -- TACET for --a minute

8:30 -- Point of Alignment between to chorus halves: "Final answer to "Who are we" (in this universe)"

SHADOW CHORUS -- (27 Singers)

more traditionally-scored choir roles, never responding to the smartphones' primer tones. Provocative text at times, rhetorically questioning the whereabouts of God in a technology-driven world, with tone that could be interpreted as dismissive, existentially questioning the nature of consciousness, criticizing a "mindless peoples' religion", and singing with a sense of urgency, warning, concern, frustration.

0:00 -- Syllable-Cloud

0:45 -- Where is God?

1:45 -- Point of Alignment between to chorus halves: "In the Land of the Free And the home of the Brave World, the Brave world, the Brave world"

1:50 -- What is the Brave World?

5:15 -- Point of Alignment between to chorus halves: "Final answer to "What is the Brave World", and ellision into "Who are We" (in this universe)"

5:40 -- Who are we? (in this universe)

8:30 -- Point of Alignment between to chorus halves: "Final answer to "Who are we" (in this universe)"

Electronics Score -- (27 Smartphones -- playing LCR audio clips)

Think of this as 'The rest of the orchestra' -- similar to a fixed-electronics audio accompaniment, except it will be triggered live by the chorus-controller's 256 trigger-points that occur throughout the piece, and may be cued by the conductor as if the chorus-controller is playing an auxiliary percussion instrument.

0:00 -- Rustlings, Organic Sounds

Lines from Clare's text suggestions that I feel particularly drawn to:

- "Our lights, though small, still pierce the night" - This reminds me of the Mother Theresa quote about a single drop in the ocean, and I love that.
- Regarding: "The light can be kindness, empathy or memories", I like the idea of integrating tokens of kindness and empathy in the "Who are we" section, but I'm more averse to memories, because I want this text to be about looking forward; also, some people live with a lot of deeply haunting / triggering memories.
- "Small acts of kindness can make a big change -- small lights shining together can make a big glow" --- I just like this, it feels really warm and relevant to the piece. Probably will fit best in the "Who are we" section.
- "Verse 2 - some light and lyrics on experience of seeing others' lights" -- I'm not really thinking in terms of verses and choruses, but I definitely like this sentiment and could see this notion being woven into the 'light' half of the chorus' rebukes to the 'shadow' half around as a rebuke to the shadow chorus' chastising provocative sentiments, perhaps around 3:00 as the 'light' chorus re-enters in the 'Brave World' section.
- These three lyric snippets: "Even a small light (or flashlight) can guide the lost", "We are not the morning, but we hold the promise", & "Should your hands grow weary, I'll carry your light too" --- I really like the sentiments behind all three of these. I feel like I can imagine ways of integrating these words into the 'light' chorus' role around minutes 4:00, 7:00, or 8:00.

Random thoughts from Jon:

On fear:

- In a way, I'd like for the 'fear' emoted in this piece to manifest most as "fear of technological advancements", "fear of feeling one's sense-of-purpose/meaning replaced by advancing technology", and perhaps even "fear of what we may learn with regards to the functioning of our own minds and questions as to whether certain kinds of scientific truths unveiled may may challenge one's spirituality" --- I want there to be an intentional irony here in the fact that the 'light' half of the chorus will literally be strictly mimicking their smartphones' PrimerTones to fulfill their role in this contemporary choir performance.